Are Repetitive Stress Injuries Covered By Workers' Compensation?

Doing the same work every day often puts stress on your muscles and joints. These repeated motions can lead to repetitive stress injuries that limit your ability to do your job.

In some cases, employees might find themselves out of work for several weeks or months at a time due to repetitive stress injuries that inhibit their ability to perform their jobs! In these cases, it's important that employees seek workers' compensation benefits.

With few exceptions, stress injuries that are due to repetitive movements are covered by workers' compensation in New York. Here are a few of the injuries that fall under the category of repetitive stress injuries.

Examples of Repetitive Stress Injuries:

Carpal Tunnel Syndrome
Tennis Elbow
Bursitis
Tendonitis

Trigger Finger

In the unfortunate event you develop a work related injury or illness, we encourage you to contact our office. As an employee, you are protected by workers' compensation and can receive compensation for your time off of work, as well as any medical treatments.

If you are suffering from carpal tunnel syndrome or another repetitive stress injury, give our office a call. Our attorneys will help you get the workers' compensation benefits that you are entitled to.
