The Attorneys at Pyrros & Serres LLP Workers' Compensation Claims

What To Do If You Are Denied Workers' Compensation

We know how frustrating workplace injuries can be. If you have been injured at work recently, it's important that you receive workers' compensation to help pay for your medical expenses and loss of your pay while you are out of work.

Unfortunately, there is the possibility that your workers' compensation claim will be denied by your insurance company.

If this happens to you or someone you know, there are a few simple steps you can take to help you get back on the right track.

Steps to Take:

Contact Your Insurance Company -

Mistakes happen. Contact your insurance company to make sure that the denial was not a mix-up. Sometimes, a missing document or internal error on their end might be the reason behind why you were denied workers' compensation.

File a Claim with the Workers' Compensation Board-

You should file a claim with the NYS Workers' Compensation Board. If the carrier rejects your claim, a hearing should be scheduled so your claim can be heard by a judge. A claim should be filed even if the carrier accepts your claim so that your future rights are protected. You have two years from your date of accident to file a claim with the board.

Contact Our Office -

The litigation and appeals process can be complicated. We work with our clients to not only to protect their rights, but to make the process simple and efficient.
